Why Does This Matter?

Offering

God is a generous God. In Christ, He has lavished upon us the unsurpassed riches of His grace (Ephesians 1:7-8). Just as we love because He first loved us (1 John 4:19), so we give because He has and continues to give generously to us. Our time of offering matters because it allows us to obediently respond to God's overwhelming generosity toward us by extending generosity towards others. Unlike the specific numerical percentages that marked the giving of the nation of Israel in the Old Testament, we are called to give consistently, thoughtfully, generously, sacrificially, and freely as an act of worship to our generous God (cf. 1 Corinthians 16:1-4; 2 Corinthians 8:1-9:15).

Spotlight

Next 2 Sundays: Psalms Mini-Series

For the next two Sundays, we will take a short break from Luke for a mini-series on Psalms 92 and 111. In this series, Gideon will lead us to explore how true worship is a joyful privilege and the master key to a flourishing life. We will see how corporate praise re-centers our delight on the Creator rather than the creation, and how the heartbeat of biblical wisdom is found in a profound reverence for God. We encourage you to read these psalms before each Sunday to prepare. Our series in Luke will resume on 9 August.
